Laguna Gloria's new vision

$9 million Marcus grant brings sculpture garden, environs to life.

There's been more to see in the past year at Laguna Gloria, the 12-acre lakeside estate belonging to the Contemporary Austin, the organization that resulted from the 2011 merger of Arthouse and the Austin Museum of Art.

Last year, museum leaders announced a new mission for Laguna Gloria, defining the site as a sculpture garden, an art-in-nature environment for permanent and temporary installations of sculpture. New vision declared, the Contemporary promptly received a $9 million grant from the Betty and Edward Marcus Foundation, the majority of that money earmarked for commissioning and acquiring sculpture and permanent outdoor installations that creatively respond specifically to the Laguna Gloria environs.

Several installations were already in the works before the Marcus grant. Now, they gesture to-ward what Laguna Gloria might be in the future, A sleek, quasi-mod-emist payilionlike sculpture by Liam Gillick now roosts on a prominent lakeside spot just below the Driscoll Villa, Along the peninsula pathway, a colorful interactive series of sound-making sculp-tures by Charles Long entertain with their quirky noises. And standing sen-tinel over a meadow near the end of the peninsula is a grid of nine 1-ton steel sculptures refashioned by Marianne Vitale.

However, none of these installations would have the presence they do without the benefit o out the benefit of some landscape improvement that's already been accomplished.

Quite literally there is more open terrain to see now at Laguna Gloria. After commissioning Austin environmen tal planning firm Siglo Group to conduct a land management assessmen of the site, the museum has started the removal of invasive nonnative plant species that had overtaken much of the peninsula waterside.

Now open stretches of lakefront emerge for the first time in decades. In-deed, Gillick's installation – "Raised Laguna Discussion Platform (Job 1073)" – sits on a por-tion of ground previously overrun with invasive nonnative giant cane.

The clearing of inva-sive plants and unruly undergrowth has opene new pathways to love-ly waterfront spots pre-viously inaccessible. A striking grove of cypress trees now comes into the Recently, the Con-temporary autounced that, after a competitive search process, it select-ed the prominent Boston-based landscape ar-chitecture firm of Reed Hilderbrand to design a complete master plan for Laguna Gloria. Reed Hilderbrand now begins a nearly yearlong process to re-conceive the entire 12-acre Lagu-na Gloria site, includ-ing the villa and the landscape gardens around it. the peninsula meadow and the waterfront along Lake Austin and the lagoon from which the site draws its name.

"The combination of both the historic gar-dens as well as what Clara Driscoll called 'the wilds' - this outer edge of the site - really represents a very interesting ecological challenge," said Christopher Moyles, a principal with Reed Hil-derbrand in charge of the Laguna Gloria project. "Our role will be to edit the site so that's it's clear what the different ecologies are so we can height-en them and understand the site's different habitata."

The ecotones emerge as the most fascinating the transitional zones between different ecosystems where differing ecologies are in tension, Moyles said.

Any ideas are, of course, merely ideas now. The master plan is a year or so away from being finished, let alone enacted upon. And many issues need to be addressed, including new vehicle circulation and parking strategies; imagining aiting for new buildings such as a café and visitor's center; and clarifying the plantings, the historic gardens the meadows and the clusters of woodlands. And of course enhanc-sculpture. "Our role is not to dictate or dedicate certain areas for sculpture or to maintain a static landscape," Moyles said. "But rather we'll look to edit the site so it's clear what different ecologies and different ecologies are and so then artists can re-spond to it."

Among the ideas floated by Moyles and his colleagues during the selection process as a suggestion for expanding people's experience of the water's edge is a boardwalk that could extend over the marsh grasses between the peninsula and the lake marsh now more visible than it has been in years.

"We want to try to cel-ebrate the water's edge, encage it and set it in motion, get people to expe-rience it in new ways and see if there are potential sites for sculptures at the edge of or even in the lagoon," he said. Reed Hilderbrand is familiar with Texas. In Houston, the firm devel-oped a master plan for that city's Arboretum and Nature Center that addressed the park's catastrophic loss of trees, a result of a destructive combination of drought and hurricanes.

Likewise they've con-ceived of a master plan for a somewhat similar museum with historic buildings and sculpture garden, the deCordova Sculpture Park and Muse-um in Lincoln, Mass. Interestingly, the deCordo-va also borders a body of water, a large pond.

The layering of histo-ry and culture at Laguna Gloria is "breathtaking"

Moyles say.
"It's very exciting for us," he said. "We're completely thrilled."

He met "Archer" cre-ator Adam Reed (Brieger calls him a well-read er calls min a wen-tent comic genius) in college at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. They roomed together for a while afterward. Reed created the cult cur. toons "Sealab 2021" and "Frisky Dingo" for Cartoon Network's Adult

"When he was creating 'Archer,' he needed a doctor," Brieger says.

"So, being his doctor friend, I volunteered." Brieger flew to Reed's studio in Affanta, where animators took "literally a thousand photograph of him in various no expressing the full gamut of emotions.

"I signed a full-on Hol-lywood contract and got paid $1, which I still have," he says. Even after Reed told him the type of outrageous things the character was going to say, Brieger offered the use of his real name. But Reed went with the Teutonic-soundin Krieger, a better fit for the son of a Nazi war criminal. It's common knowledge among the doctor's friends and coworkers that he provided the character's look. "I have some still images (from the show) that I've used as slides in son of the lectures I give to residents and medical students," he says. The gig has led to some

"I certainly hope not," he says, laughing. "No, that hasn't happened

Brieger also has yet to freak out any patients who are coming out of anesthesia only to find the real-life image of the ethically challenged cartoon character hovering over them in his signature white coat. Bu there's plenty of time for

The Krieger character is voiced by actor Lucky Yates, whom Brieger met when the "Archer" crew came to Austin to perform a live reading recently. (Interestingly, Vates was the physical model for another "Archer" character, field agent Ray Gillette.)

"I had no idea what these people were like, but he is really a nice guy," Brieger says, lamenting the fact that he missed an opportunity to move his mouth while Yates provided Krieger's ice, ventriloquist-sty "I wish I would have thought of that," he says. Next time." Meanwhile, Brieger doesn't anticipate future animation modeling gigs. "But if Adam calls," he says, "I will certainly be there."
